PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Now more than ever, organizations seek leaders who are attuned to the complexities of leadership in a fast-paced, technology-driven world but can also engage, influence and build cohesive, productive teams. The Leeds School of Business, in partnership with the University of Colorado's Newton Endowed Chair in Leadership, offers a forward-looking executive education program focused on modern organizational leadership. This highly interactive program is led by CU Boulder's world-class faculty, who bring firsthand leadership experience from private industry, the military and the U.S. government.

Participants will develop key leadership competencies, ranging from emotional intelligence to diversity management and developing and implementing a strategic vision, that they can confidently practice when team building, motivating groups, mentoring others and forming relationships with stakeholders at all levels.

“Leadership is the most important factor in career success, and its core tenets translate across industries.”

—Philip P. DiStefano, Chancellor, University of Colorado Boulder

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

The Executive Leadership program is a research-based, innovative offering designed especially for business professionals who already lead small to mid-size teams or are working their way toward a leadership position in their organizations. Individuals can gain new perspectives on leadership in changing contexts and obtain greater clarity of thought to apply to their personal leadership challenges. Organizations that are interested in re-energizing their internal leadership with greater strategic focus may also consider this program to increase employees' leadership abilities and effectiveness—ultimately helping the company's internal culture flourish while advancing the business forward.
